Art of Healing. Hospitals in Italy in the Early Modern Era

Concept and organization: Alessandro Nova, Jana Graul, and Fabian Jonietz

Guest scholars: Philine Helas, John Henderson, and Britta Hentschel

»In Tuscany«, writes Leon Battista Alberti – evidently not without a touch of pride – in his treatise on architecture, »there are wonderful hospitals that were built for incredible sums.« He is not alone in his opinion, for many other writers, thinkers and travellers likewise pay tribute to the activities, facilities and beauty of these charitable institutions, whose functions were so much more wide-ranging than those of the »hospital« as we understand it today. As hospices that cared for the sick and dying, as homes for foundlings, orphans and the poor, and at the same time in their role as administrators of land holdings and financial assets, hospitals were intimately bound up with social and religious life in towns and cities. These institutions shaped the urban structure and the cityscape of Italian municipalities to a degree that is difficult for us to imagine today, and therein reflect the permanent presence of poverty, disease and death in civic life in the Early Modern era.

This Studienkurs at the Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz aimed to approach these broader phenomena by studying the »hospital« as microcosm. It inquired in particular into the role played in these institutions by art as the mediator between poverty and wealth, the healthy and the sick, the soul and the body – in short, between life and death. It was interested firstly in examining in what way the endowment and patronage of hospitals is bound up with the need for spiritual salvation or personal prestige, in other words how it reflects social structures. The lavish architectural design and artistic decoration of many hospitals point, secondly, to fundamental notions and beliefs regarding the impact and (healing) effect of works of visual art. A third area of interest is the eminent socio-historical significance of the institutions for artists of the Early Modern era, who not only held meetings and deepened their knowledge of anatomy here, but also ran their workshops, lived and in some cases even built their burial chapels inside such hospitals.

Water Forms: History, Gestalt and Semantics of an Element

Concept and organization: Hana Gründler, Stephanie Hanke, and Alessandro Nova

Guest scholars: Hannah Baader, Wolfgang Detel, Bruce Edelstein, Frank Fehrenbach, Berthold Hub, and Wolfgang Loseries

Marcel Odenbach's large-scale collage Ein Tag am Meer (A Day at the Sea, 2012), which has the refugee issue deliberately inscribed into its moved sea surface, almost perfectly expresses the visual multilayeredness and symbolic polyvalence of the phenomenon of water. It is illustrative of the fact that water, which already in ancient cosmogonies and philosophies was seen as the source of the universe, is more closely interwoven with the cultural history of mankind than any other element. Omnipresent in myth and religion, it is also of central importance in the history of science, technology and medicine. To this day, its life-sustaining and at the same time destructive powers are the cause of man's ambivalent relationship to water, which by virtue of its ubiquity has given rise to a wide variety of poetic and visual imagery and symbolic meanings over the centuries. These range from fertility, eroticism and birth to purification, healing and baptism and finally to death, threat of deluge and drowning in sea storms. Today's primary associations with water are, however, the dangers of rising sea levels and impending water shortage.

For the visual arts the distinct materiality of water, its transparency, mobility and reflection as well as its impalpable depth have posed – and still pose – special challenges. This is true for the representation of its complex manifestations in painting and photography as well as for the (artful) staging of water itself, which aims at extraordinary visual, haptic and acoustic effects and often goes hand in hand with the history of technology, as in the construction of fountains and hydraulic automatons. Gardens, for instance, are predicated on the presence of water and in large part characterised by specially created water architectures and installations, while twentieth-century Land Art increasingly links it with environmental issues.

Yet even on a large scale water plays a crucial role for the aesthetic perception of nature: its force creates and configures landscapes and, in return, it is itself shaped into rivers, lakes and waterfalls. Large-scale human interventions in the landscape, as in the case of river and shoreline regulations, are almost always motivated by a desire to bring water under control. Hence containment of this element has always been understood as an expression of power, and making it available or staging it in fountains has been seen as a symbol of prosperity and wealth. As a result, water took on a crucial role in the self-presentation of rulers and, with it, a political dimension. These multifaceted connections allow us, among other things, to reflect on the following issues: in what way can the ever-mutating phenomenon of water be represented in art and architecture and at the same time be grasped in formal-analytic terms? How are its aesthetic and conceptual dimensions to be determined from various (cultural) perspectives? To what extent and in what way has critical reflection on this element changed since the emergence of photography, film and digital media? And what ecological, ethical or political implications are and should be addressed and discussed with regard to water?

The objective of the Studienkurs was to focus specifically on the semantics and appearances of water from the perspective of longue durée, and to analyse the complex architectural and artistic involvement with this element. This was done through visits to selected sites in the regions of Tuscany and Latium which were complemented by theoretical sessions, film screenings and lectures in Florence. In doing so, we deemed it imperative to also consider the topicality of the subject in light of current ecological and political developments and challenges.

University and Diversity: The Bolognese Experience (1088–2017)

Concept and Organization: Annette Hoffmann, Marco Musillo, Jessica N. Richardson, and Gerhard Wolf

Guest scholars: Michele Bacci, Gabriella Bernardi, Marzia Faietti, Massimo Medica, and Samuel Vitali

The 2017 Studienkurs focused on universitas and diversitas, concepts that are emblematic of the city of Bologna from the medieval to the modern period. The idea that the sum of all things comprises a whole entity (universum) provided a starting point for exploring the city, whose urban fabric is characterized by its former canals, medieval towers and porticoes. Bologna's university, the Alma Mater Studiorum, considered to be founded in 1088, encapsulates the city's manifest identities through its original organization as a conglomeration of loose societies called »nations«; the teaching of canon and civil law and medicine; and the training of personages such as Petrarch, Leon Battista Alberti and Copernicus. Bologna as a cosmopolitan city is shaped further by its relationship to religious institutions (the Dominicans and the Papacy, for example); by persons acting on an »international« scale, such as the Bentivoglio, Gabriele Paleotti, Ugo Buoncompagni (Pope Gregory XIII), Pier Paolo Pasolini; and by the artworks of Nicola Pisano, Giotto, Raphael, Giambologna or the Carracci. Carlo Cesare Malvasia, writing in the seventeenth century, described Bologna as the »metropolis of a kingdom« due to its role as the capital of ancient Etruria and as the »school of the universe« for having taught philosophy, letters and religion before all other cities. The images of the city as an important geographical crossroad linking central and northern Italy to the rest of Europe and as hub of learning, culture and avant-garde thinking pervades into modern times. They impacted, for example, the tragic bombing of the city during World War II or the Neo-Fascist attack at the Central Station in 1980, a site that in recent years witnessed the construction of the Alta velocità railway, with its projected architectural complex by Isozaki-Maffei.

The seemingly disparate histories of Bologna allowed the Studienkurs participants to explore notions of universitas and diversitas and to engage, more generally, with the mechanisms that contribute to the cultural constructions of multi-faceted urban centres and their relationship to surrounding and interconnected environments. Shifting between synchronic and diachronic approaches, topics explored, included: Santo Stefano and its artistic and religious connections to the Eastern Mediterranean; Bolognese manuscript illumination and its »international« impact; the open-air tombs of professors of law and medicine; cultic sites in the city (the Madonna di San Luca) and in the surrounding territory (Montovolo); spaces as places for display and as sites of alterity: relics, bodies and burials of saints (e.g., St Dominic and St Caterina Vigri), anatomical waxes, collections of natural objects and artifacts with transcultural trajectories, especially to the New World and the Ottoman Empire, and their role in the history of science and scientific knowledge (Ulisse Aldrovandi and Ferdinando Cospì); the writing of artistic traditions and the so-called Bolognese School of Painting; as well as the modern urban fabric of the city. The Studienkurs questioned how civic space and the cultures embodied within it participated in connecting the local with the universal, and how shifting notions of university/universality and diversity can be described and analyzed within the interplay of individuals and visual traditions that together make up the experience of the city.

The City as Archive. Histories of Collecting and Archiving in and the Musealisation of Florence, Eighteenth Century to the Present

Concept and organization: Hannah Baader and Costanza Caraffa

Guest scholars: Fausto Barbaglia, Carolin Behrmann, Barbara d'Agostino, Simona di Marco, Knut Ebeling, Marzia Faietti, Robert Felfe, Paolo Galluzzi, Hana Gründler, Francesca Klein, Donata Levi, Francesco Martelli, Marco Musillo, Chiara Nepi, Maria Possenti, Daniele Rapino, Maria Gloria Roselli, Dieter Schlenker, Tiziana Serena, Emanuela Sesti, Timothy Verdon, and Gerhard Wolf

In November 1916 a spectacular auction took place in the city of New York, when the art dealer, collector and trained artist Elia Volpi (1858–1938) sold a collection of Italian and Florentine art, in total more than 1200 works. Not even a decade earlier, Volpi had started to display this collection at the Palazzo Davanzati in Florence, a historical fourteenth-century palace. Volpi had bought the palace in 1904 and, following a restoration, opened it to the public in 1910.

Volpi's museum at Palazzo Davanzati is a single, yet significant case among a series of new museums, collections and archives established in Florence, between the eighteenth and the twenty-first century. Many of these built upon earlier collections or collecting practices. Almost all of them were re-systematized or reshaped in the decades and centuries to follow and continue to be re-thought or remodeled to this day.

By the mid-nineteenth century, a set of museums dedicated to the display of art and archeology had been institutionalized in Florence. Whereas several of these initiatives can be connected to the making of the new Italian state, with Florence serving as its capital from 1865–1870, others date back to the House of the Lorraine. They can be linked to a variety of phenomena: Enlightenment thought, secularization processes, the appraisal or appropriation of Renaissance culture, philanthropism and orientalism. After an initial acquisition of a collection of Egypt artifacts in 1824 and the subsequent sponsorship of a French-Tuscan expedition to Egypt under the guidance of J.-F. Champollion and I. Rossini, in 1855 the Museo Egizio was established. The Museo Etrusco followed in 1870. In 1865, the year in which Florence was declared capital, the Museo Nazionale del Bargello opened its doors. The Galleria dell'Accademia opened in 1882, prominently displaying Michelangelo's David, after its removal from the Piazza della Signoria in 1873. The desire to create public access to archives and study collections for both scholars and the larger public was not limited to works of art; it extended to history, literature and especially to the natural sciences. Florentine archiving practices included the systematic collection of scientific instruments, as well as the recording of geological formations, a singular collection of plant specimens, mammals, birds, skeletons and the like. It included also geographical, astronomical and a wide range of textual records. Together, these form a rare and surprising accumulation or archive of epistemic things and of knowledge distributed in and provided by the city at its various institutional levels.

Among the first specialized museums was the Reale Museo di Fisica e Storia Naturale, founded in 1775, that would become the cornerstone of the Istituto e Museo di Storia della Scienza (1927), today's Museo Galileo. In 1852, Florence saw the establishment of the Archivio di Stato di Firenze, its foundation promoted by Grand Duke Leopoldo II, who installed a commission to investigate effective forms of systematization of the archival materials. The Biblioteca Nazionale Centrale, established in 1861, incorporated a collection of 40,000 manuscripts and books left to Florence in 1714 by Antonio Magliabechi »for the universal benefit of the city«. The Istituto Geografico Militare, founded after the unification of Italy, was brought to Florence in 1865. An implicit colonial understanding shaped the Museo di Antropologia, created by Paolo Mantegazza in 1869. The Istituto Agronomico per l'Oltremare related to overseas possessions, hosted in the city since 1904, had a »scientific« mission clearly linked to Italy's colonial undertakings.

Photography played an important role in archival practices, both in Florence, but especially about Florence, archiving, configuring, and multiplying the artistic and architectural »body« of the city. In 1852 the Fratelli Alinari started their activities as providers of photographic materials, the Locchi were to follow in 1924 with the documentation of events. Photo archives were accumulated in a number of other institutions both within and outside the city.

The rich cultural engagement in the above-mentioned archives and museum foundations of the later eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth centuries included the Stibbert, Horne, Bardini, and Santa Croce museums among others. It also comprised research institutions like Villa I Tatti and the Kunsthistorisches Institut in Florenz itself. Their matrix can be found in the largest donation to the city, that of the Medici collections. In 1737 the last Medici Anna Maria Luisa, the Dowager Electress Palatine, ensured that the collections owned by her family would remain in Florence as »ornaments of the state for the use of the public« and for »the curiosity of foreigners«. This legacy determined the future of Florence as a center of the arts and tourism. In fact, it was the spectacular »density« of artworks and of architectural remains that was highlighted when the historical center of Florence was declared UNESCO Cultural Heritage site in 1982 (with an addendum in 2015), extending over an area of 505 hectares.

The establishment of Florence's eighteenth-, nineteenth- and twenty-century museums and archives can be connected as much to cosmopolitanism as to local interests, the making of an Italian nation and, in more recent years, to the European project. These creations stand for structural changes in the making of public spheres. They indicate shifts in educational practices, as well as social and political discontinuities, but they reveal also larger epistemic changes. Their making and remaking hint at different moments of the reappraisal of material and visual cultures, as well as to changing forms of knowledge production and to different approaches to archives and archeologies of the past, often conceptualized as trajectories into the future. Florence, therefore, might be read as an immense archive of knowledge that is more than the architectural articulation of its stones and as a site that invites us to reflect upon new archeologies of its past and present.

If we consider cities as well as archives as open and dynamic processes, we might shift our attention from the monumental past to the city as an archive in the making (Rao 2009) that itself addresses the future. The 2018 Studienkurs considered the city as an archive, from fortuitous discoveries to their social productivity and their intellectual and aesthetic enjoyment. It offered the possibility to study the archives and collections in Florence in the context of the various projects for and about the future of the city and of cities in general.
